[Photo Album]: Glendale College, Ohio

Glendale, Ohio: 1912

$800

Oblong octavo. Cloth covered board with “photographs” stamped in gilt on the front cover measuring 7" x 10". An assortment of 155 sepia toned and black and white photographs measuring roughly 3½" x 2½" with some variation affixed to stiff black paper. Offsetting on the front boards, tears and some bowing else very good. A photo album and scrapbook from Glendale College in Glendale, Ohio around 1912. Originally founded in 1854 as American Female College it was later changed to Glendale Female College before closing in 1929. The collection displays the college life of a group of young women from masquerade parties, one was captioned “the new girls dance for the old,” to studying in dorms covered in banners and pennants from the school. Besides their academics the women were involved in outdoor activities such as “sun bathing” with messy hair, violin lessons, and a celebration for May Day which involved flower dancing and a May pole. In the rear of the album is a tiny scrapbook with dried fauna, small notes, one featuring the instructions for the May Pole dance, and ticket stubs for the London orchestra, The Pageant of Darkness and Light, and Chanticleer with Maude Adams. A wonderful look at early girls education in America.
