The Woman Investor 1914
$3950

Quarto (12" x 9"). 21, [3]pp. First and last leaves a little stained, detached at the spine, very good. Original publisher's mockup, containing the basic outline of the magazine with empty spaces for the still-unwritten articles, for the first attempt at a magazine featuring women as investors. The lead article to be written by Jane Addams was titled "Dollars and Sense". Other projected articles (presumably never written or published) include "The Million Who are Taboo" by Anne Faulkner; "The Test of Investment Capacity" by Mrs. Russell Sage; and "The Words of His Mouth: Concerning a Finance Gentleman who was so Smooth he slipped" by Elizabeth Beecher. On page 4 the editor or publisher prints a page-long statement of purpose with a decidedly feminist opening statement: "Women stockholders are denied equality with men stockholders." And further on, concerning the magazine: "It is likely to be found a militant. It will be as fair, though, as it is outspoken." We can find no further information about this intended publication and no publisher or editor is named. OCLC locates no copies; there is no record that the magazine was ever published. Unique.
