Elizabeth L. Banks

The Autobiography of a "Newspaper Girl"

New York: Dodd, Mead and Company 1902

First edition. Octavo. 317pp. Decorated brown cloth stamped in black and white. A bit of rubbing and light spotting in the front board, most noticeable in upper left corner of the front board, still a nice and sound, very good copy. Born in Trenton, New Jersey, Banks entered journalism as a "typewriter girl", then worked for the society pages in Baltimore and St. Paul.

1902

Moving to England she found work reporting for “Punch” and the “Daily News”. Following the footsteps of Nellie Bly she became an international celebrity by engaging in immersion journalism - seeking employment in a number of jobs available to working class women, exploring and exposing their working conditions.
